Brite Deploys Body-Worn Cameras for All Monroe County Probation Officers

ROCHESTER, N.Y., Wednesday, March 11, 2026 – Brite, the nation’s top public safety technology integrator, is proud to announce today that it recently deployed rugged Getac body-worn cameras (BWCs) for all Monroe County probation officers.

County Executive Adam Bello announced the deployment on March 2, the same day all Monroe County probation officers became required to wear BWCs while in the field. The purpose of the body-worn cameras is to enhance officer safety during field visits, provide an objective record of client interactions, and support best practices in community supervision.

Brite Public Safety Account Executive Tucker Beneville, said, “We are excited to expand our partnership with Monroe County by equipping probation officers with body-worn cameras. The county’s mission to enhance officer safety and strengthen public trust has been consistent from day one, and we greatly appreciate the trust the county has placed in us to deliver on that mission. Special thanks to our partners at Getac and our solutions architect, Ryan Novotny, for their support throughout this process.”

Monroe County Public Safety Department Accreditation and Compliance Manager Samuel Farina said, “Brite was extremely helpful, patient, and customer focused during the research, design, procurement, delivery, installation, and training process. The attention to our needs was a credit to Brite’s customer service and assurance that we received a BWC system that was compatible with our needs and capacity. The BWC product was easily adopted by our personnel and allowed for an easy training and transition period.”

The Monroe County Probation Department is the third largest law enforcement agency in the county with nearly 150 sworn officers. Prior to Brite's deployment of the BWCs, each officer received comprehensive training on camera operation, activation protocols, and compliance with all applicable laws and regulations.
